1. ◇ post preprints on public servers
 - ◇ post a pre-print version of the journal article on Internet web sites including electronic pre-print servers, and to retain indefinitely such version on such servers or sites

◇ Cell Press and The Lancet have policies that differ as to preprints, as they will not consider for publication articles already posted publicly. This is a rule agreed upon by The International Committee of Medical Journal Editors. However, both Cell and The Lancet welcome Elsevier's policy on post-publication posting and follow it for their journals.

2. post a revised personal version of the text of the final journal article (to reflect changes made in the peer review and editing process) on the author's personal or institutional web site or server, with a link to the journal home page (on elsevier.com)
3. need to include in each such posting a full citation of the published journal article (once known) and a link to the homepage of the journal on ScienceDirect or, better, the DOI of the published article.

1. ASBMB is also green on author self-archiving of both the pre-refereeing preprint and the peer-reviewed postprint on the author's institutional website. The only uncertainty (and it is of no importance) was about the publisher's PDF. The definition of "postprint" is the peer-reviewed final draft: either the author's version or the publisher's PDF.

0. Some journals may place additional conditions on posting. Please consult the journal's home page for details.
1. may post a copy of your paper on your personal or institutional web server, provided that the server is non-commercial and that appropriate credit is given to the journal, including the exact copyright notice as printed in the journal. The form of the copyright notice is: © 2xxx by [name of copyright holder].
2. For pre-publication versions of your paper (i.e., pre-prints), appropriate credit means a statement prominently displayed on the paper itself, specifying the paper's status, date, and journal name. (For example: "Submitted (or Accepted) for publication to (by) Journal Name on MM/DD/YYYY.") A link to the journal's home page or the journal article should also be included.
3. no conditions on posting a paper intended for submission (but not yet submitted) to one of our journals, except to note that posting a paper online may, in some cases, constitute prior publication - for example, posting to a commercial venue and/or to a venue with a formal review and approval process.
4. may post a paper accepted for publication at any time prior to publication, provided that the conditions described in this FAQ have been met.

5. ◇ We encourage you to use or refer to the final, published version of your paper as soon as it is available (remember that articles published by the Press are often made available online before the print edition is released).
 - ◇ We encourage you to use or refer to the final, definitive version of your paper whenever possible. You have the choice of posting the PDF version of your paper or posting the citation, abstract (if present), and a link to the HTML version hosted on the Press's server. You may not, however, post proofs of your paper.
 - ◇ a modest fee may be charged if we supply you with the PDF of your published paper.
 6. may place your published paper in a non-commercial data repository maintained by an institution of which you are a member, provided that all relevant conditions described in this FAQ and on the journal's home page are met. Your paper may be made publicly available after the appropriate embargo period has been observed. You are responsible for informing the manager of the institutional repository of the embargo period that must be observed. (Embargo periods are as follows: American Journal of Human Genetics: 6 months; Astrophysical Journal and Supplement Series, Astronomical Journal, Publications of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific: 3 years; all other journals: 12 months.)
 7. If you choose to submit a pre-publication version of your paper to a non-commercial, discipline-specific pre-print or working paper archive, however, we require that appropriate credit is given to the journal as described above and ask you to remove the working paper from the archive after your paper is published or replace it with the published version.
 8. To avoid citation confusion, we encourage you to post your paper online only in its final, published version.
